PROFESSIONAL EXPERIENCE

Principal, Barbara Henry & Associates

February 2013 – present

Principal for consulting practice focused on transforming museums into welcoming and thriving cultural places embraced by their communities. Provide recommendations in areas related to public and civic engagement, authentic community collaborations and partnerships, and relevant programming. Coach staff in developing a dynamic organizational culture, innovation practices, and institutional change to advance authentic museum transformations.

Visiting Faculty, TyPA Lab on Museum Management, TyPA Fundación, Buenos Aires

August 2013 – Present

Design and facilitate professional development workshops for Latin American museum professionals who participate in the TyPA (Theory and Practice in the Arts) leadership program. Sessions related to organizational change and culture, cross-functional teams, visitor-centered and prototyping practices, and community engagement. Serve as coach and mentor for participants' Lab projects.

Interim Director of Education and Public Engagement, the di Rosa, Napa Valley

August 2015 – January 2017

Member of senior executive team overseeing department strategies, activities, and staff for a renewed commitment to public and civic engagement. Collaborated with staff in creating an organizational culture for broadening visitor experiences. Advanced volunteer council activities to support institutional change. Provided programmatic content and expertise for grant proposals. Directed the development of annual department budget.

Center Director, the Lab, Oakland Museum of California

July 2011 – January 2013

Directed new interdisciplinary center integrating functions of curatorial, visitor experience, and evaluation research. Following a major museum reorganization, developed for the new Lab Center an infrastructure including an annual budget and monitoring system, new exhibition development processes, evaluation research activities, curatorial activities, interpretive projects and various project teams to support Lab functions. Member of the museum's Executive Team.

Chief Curator of Education, Oakland Museum of California

February 1988 – June 2011

Directed OMCA's Education Department with a budget of up to $1.4 million and serving more than 60,000 visitors annually through school, family, and public programs; community collaborations; large-scale events; and exhibition interpretation activities. Responsibilities included: developing and managing the department's annual budget; developing a range of public programs and education activities; deepening visitor advocacy practices; developing and managing community advisory councils, partnerships, and collaborations; managing the Docent Council program of 400+ volunteers; developing and advancing new interpretive practices for exhibitions and gallery renovations; and producing teacher training and curriculum development and online educational resources. Designed and facilitated staff development activities and managed, supervised, and evaluated staff. Directed and developed major projects and initiatives for ensuring the department remained vibrant and relevant during times of change. Developed grant proposals. Member of the museum's Senior Management Team.

Directed major projects that included:

James Irvine Innovation Project (2007–2010). Developed new interpretive strategies with related visitor research that transformed the museum's art gallery into a more welcoming and lively place for diverse audiences. An experimental research project that provided the foundation for the interpretive strategies and visitor experiences incorporated into the museum's galleries, exhibitions, and other areas of the museum campus.

Advancing Our Multicultural Commitment (2005–2008). Institution-wide initiative for staff development in cultural sensitivity and inclusivity. Received IMLS support.

Annual Days of the Dead exhibition and celebration project (1994–2005, founding director). The museum's largest community-based project involving more than 800 community members annually in the planning and implementation of various activities. Evolved project as a laboratory for experimenting with new interpretive, program, and exhibition strategies informed through community engagement.

James Irvine Family Learning Research Project (1999–2002). Focus on visitor research and evaluation for strengthening family programs and resources. Project resulted in doubling and diversifying attendance by families.

Latino History Project: A Pilot Youth Program for Collecting Community History (1998–2003). Advisory committees and youth included in conducting of original research on 20th century history in their communities. This interdisciplinary project resulted in exhibits, programs, online resources, and publications (handbook and anthology). Evaluation report identified program impact on youth. Featured in Urban Network: Museums Embracing Communities. Received IMLS support.

Myth & Reality: The California Gold Rush and Its Legacy. A statewide interdisciplinary project extending the teaching of this global event across four grade levels. In commemoration of the 150th anniversary of the California Gold Rush, project included a statewide education advisory committee, teacher-generated curricula, and a trainer-of-trainer program to disseminate new materials across the region. Project followed by online teacher resource, Picture This: California Perspectives on American History, making the museum's extensive collections more accessible and relevant to educators. Teachers advised and contributed to developing relevant curricula connections for site activities and content. Picture This became most visited OMCA museum site. <http://museumca.org/picturethis>

Interpretive Specialist, The Oakland Museum

June 1980 – January 1988

Developed and implemented a wide range of new arts and educational programs, including theme tours, conferences, festivals, classes, lectures, and outreach activities for children and adults. Designed and conducted training sessions for the museum's volunteer docents. Prepared gallery guides, educational materials, and grant proposals.

Regional Director, Smithsonian Bay Area Regional Conference, The Oakland Museum/Smithsonian Institution

February 1983 – November 1987

Directed two regional conferences for teachers from the nine San Francisco Bay Area counties. Supervised and coordinated project committees, vendors, staff, and volunteers. Managed the promotional campaign, edited all program materials, and designed and conducted classes and opening sessions. Developed local support for the program from more than 30 cultural organizations in two counties. Administered and managed the conference budget.
